The oldest inhabitant could not recognize it now. Climbing up to the Redan, which was fearfully cumbered with the dead, we witnessed the scene of the desperate attack and defence, which cost both sides so much blood. The ditch outside made one sick-it was pited up with English dead, some of them scorched and blackened by the explusion, and others lacerated beyond recognition. The quantity of broken gabious and gun carriages here was extraordinary; the ground was covered with them. The bomb proofs were the same as in the Malakoff, and in one of them a music book was found with a woman's name in it, and a canary birt and vase of flowers were outside the entrance.
